County by Jimmy Cajoleas is by far my favorite followed closely by Combustible by Ace Atkins God's Gonna Trouble the Water by Dominiqua Dickey and Pit Stop by John M. Mississippi northeast community college Although there are as with all collections a few weaker entries Digits by Michael Kardos and Jerry Lewis come immediately to mind this is by far one of my favorite fiction collections I've ever read, Digits by Michael Kardos - This is really creepy and I loved it until the end, Mississippi noirvisor A college English professor notices that students in the class are missing fingers, Book Mississippi noir alley It's a great creepy story but ends suddenly and I didn't get it. Mississippi Noir Literature fiction I would have given it a five but my rating is reduced because don't like stories to leave me bewildered: Literature Fiction Mississippi noire nail Moonface by Andrew Paul - A man recounts an event from his youth when he caused someone's death. Mississippi noxubee God's Gonna Trouble the Water by Dominiqua Dickey - This is a sad story but has a redemptive ending. Book Mississippi noir furniture The boy wants nothing but them to be a family.

Dark end. (5/5)8. I still don't get it. (3/5)9. OK. (3/5)10. A white boy and black girl have a four-year-old daughter. A really good story that had me riveted. Only problem is that the ending was disappointing. (3/5)14. (4/5)15. Short and kind of dumb. (2/5)16. I don't get the point of this. Boring. Paperback 3. Mr. Paperback Tom Franklin's books epitomize Southern noir for me. The collection is very uneven. The boy got broken by being so close to kindness. Unfortunately none of the stories will stick with me. We also have the highest poverty rate in the county... Welcome to the bottom. Floyd RaShell R. J. ARC from Librarything. And that in itself grew boring. Just saying. Floyd RaShell R. Smith-Spears and Mary Miller. Mississippi Noir (Akashic Noir)
